Q: How does a prospective employer find my profile?

A: Employers can search for candidates in many ways: by entering keywords; selecting from a list of career category/types; or by defining more specific criteria such as location preference and education. It is important that you keep your profile current. Once employers enter their search criteria, the system displays a list of candidates that met the criteria. The list will include the profile information of the job seeker and a link to their primary resume (if available). Please note that an employer cannot search your resume, instead they search for information stored in your profile. It is important that you keep the information stored in your profile up-to-date and accurate. You can add up to 150 characters in each skill box, outlining keywords that can be searched by prospective employers. We suggest that you create a word document, check spelling, then copy and paste so that each skill box contains no more than 150 characters. These skills should be contained in the resume you provide, so an employer can validate the skills/experience that you offer. Job seekers can choose to have their resume viewable in the candidate search results.

Q: How can I prevent my current employer from finding my resume?

A: You may limit the contact information that will be displayed on your resume. Also, employers are not able to search by specific job seekers' names. Q: I am trying to Save & Preview my resume in the Resume Builder, but I don’t see anything. What can I do?
